During the 89th Texas Legislature's regular session, the University presented its budget request to the State Senate finance committee. As with all other schools, the University's budget request included the financial needs of the entire University, including the needs of the professional schools, such as the Law school and the Pharmacy school. In justifying the needs of the law school, the focus was placed on a new facility.

In support of the funding request for a new facility, the University presented information from the site visit report of the Association of American Law Schools (AALS), which was then incorrectly attributed to the American Bar Association (ABA), the entity responsible for accreditation of American law schools through the Council of the American Bar Association. The University regrets this error in attribution and has taken steps to safeguard and prevent a future reoccurrence of such misattribution. The site visit, completed by the AALS, is not related to the accreditation process nor the ABA.
